The object of tuning the Guitar in the Key of E major is to produce certain effects in imitation of other instruments, which either cannot be produced at all, or not so effectively in other Keys. When this result is not the object of the player, the Guitar ought never to be tuned in that Key; as the power of modulating through the Keys is thereby suspended, and the perfection of the Instrument destroyed. Nevertheless, the effects which may be produced by tuning the Guitar in the Key of E major, are not altogether to be neglected, or to be thought inconsistent with good playing, any more than some of the effects produced by Paganini on the Violin, can be condemned, tho strictly speaking, they do not belong to Violin playing, properly so called.

The Pupil therefore ought not to be taught to play the Guitar tuned in the Key of E major, until he is thoroughly acquainted with the Instrument tuned in the proper way.

We recommend to all who wish to play the Guitar well, to study the 150 Exercises for that Instrument, by the same Author.

HARMONICS. The most sonorous Harmonics are upon the 3rd 4th 5th 7th 9 and 12th frets; and are generally written in notes smaller than the others: and in order to avoid a multiplicity of additional ledger lines, are placed an octave lower than the soundswhich they produce.

The Harmonics, when pressed down, will produce the natural sounds placed under
